INTRODUCTORY NOTE

"The extraordinary wealth of the artistic products of Mysore," as disclosed by my Annual Reports, has attracted considerable attention both in India and outside. Considering its area, Mysore is extremely rich in the number of its artistic structures, the majority of which are built in the style named 'Chalukyan' by Fergusson and the rest in the Dravidian style. The name Chalukyan is undoubtedly a misnomer so far as Mysore is concerned, seeing that all the buildings of this style in Mysore were erected during the rule of the Hoysalas. According to Fergusson himself this style attained its fullest development and highest degree of perfection in the dominions of the kings of the Hoysala dynasty. The name 'Hoysala' ought to be adopted as the more appropriate designation of the style. With very few exceptions, such as the temples at Tonachi, Angadi, Belgami, Kuppatur and Chikka-Hanasoge, which go back to the eleventh century, all the Hoysala buildings in Mysore came into existence in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. The period of the ornate structures of the Dravidian style in Mysore ranges from the eighth to the sixteenth century.

The list, which is by no means exhaustive, of the monuments built in the two styles mentioned above, appended to this Note with some particulars relating to them, is enough to give some idea of the richness of Mysore in these artistic treasures. The dates given in a few cases are approximate. Fergusson has briefly described and illustrated about half a dozen of these temples. Mr. and Mrs. Workman have similarly dealt with a few more. Mr. Rice has briefly noticed several others besides in his volumes of the Epigraphia Carnatica. But the descriptions given by these scholars cannot but be incomplete, since the interior of most of the temples was a sealed book to them. Further, they have scarcely paid any attention to the sculpture of the buildings. In my Annual Reports I have not only given much additional information concerning the temples dealt with by the above-mentioned scholars, but have also described and illustrated a large number of buildings not known before. I have, besides, furnished "an immense amount of entirely new matter descriptive of the sculpture" the illustration, especially, of individual works of art signed by the artists having aroused considerable interest among scholars in Europe. Still, as a glance at the list will show, there are many monuments which await and deserve to be described and illustrated.

K. T. Somanathapur

A wish has been expressed in several quarters that the mass of literature bearing on temple architecture and iconogrphy which is increasing in volume ought to be embodied in permanent form removed from the pages of the Annual Reports. It is under contemplation to prepare and publish a monograph on Hoysala Architecture in Mysore. In the meantime it is proposed to issue about half a dozen short monographs with suitable illustrations on a few rotable buildings of the Hoysala and Dravidian styles in the State, treating of both their architecture and sculpture. The present work on the Kesava temple at Somanathapur forms the first of the series. The illustrations have been prepared by Mr. T. Namassivayam Pillai, the Photographer and Draughtsman of my Office. My thanks are due to Mr. C. H. Yates, Superintendent, Government Press, for kind suggestions with regard to the get-up of the book and the personal care bestowed on the arrangement and printing of the illustrations.

A note on the Reprint

This monograph was first published nearly sixty years ago. But its value remains undiminished to this day. To both the scholar and the lay visitor, the able pen of Sri R. Narasimhacharya provides in this work an excellent introduction to the most ornate of the Hoysala temples.

There has been a great demand for literature on this monument. This demand could not be met, if we waited to revise the volume. Hence the Directorate decided to reprint the monograph. We hope the volume will serve the immediate purpose. Grateful thanks are due to the Joint Director of Government Text Book Press, and his staff for the neat work.

ARCHITECTURE AND SCULPTURE IN MYSORE

No. 1

THE KESAVA TEMPLE AT SOMANATHAPUR

SOMANATHAPUR is a small village in the Tirumakūḍalu-Narasipur Taluk of the Mysore District in the Karnataka State, situated about half a mile from the left bank of the river Kāvēri. It is about 20 miles to the south-east of the historic town of Srirangapattana. The Kēśava temple in the village is a splendid example of the so-called Chālukyan, but more correctly Hoysaḷa, style of architecture. From the fine inscription[1] on a slab in the entrance porch of the temple (Plate XXI), we learn that Sōma or Sōmanātha, a high officer under the Hoysaḷa king Nārasimha III (A. D. 1254–1291), established the village as an agrahāra or rent free settlement of Brahmans, naming it Sōmanāthapura after himself, and built the Kēśava temple in it in A. D. 1268. There is also another inscription at Harihar,[2] which refers to the construction of this temple and gives the same date. The object of the latter inscription is primarily to record another work of piety by the same officer, namely, the construction of a gopura or tower of five storeys, adorned with golden kalaśas or finials, in front of the Hariharēśvara temple at Harihar, a town on the right bank of the Tungabhadrā, in the Dāvangere Taluk of the Chitaldrug District in the Karnataka State, and it alludes incidentally to his erection of the Kēśava temple also.

The Kēśava temple is situated in the middle of a courtyard, about 215 feet by 177 feet, surrounded by an open veranda, which contains 64 cells (Plate II). It stands on a raised terrace, about 3 feet high, which closely follows the contour of the structure and is supported at the angles by figures of elephants facing outwards (Plate I). There are two empty pavilions at the sides in front of the entrance, the upper parts of which are gone. Around the terrace there are, besides the elephants mentioned above, free images representing Vishṇu and other gods and goddesses leaning against it. Several of these images and elephants have been removed from their pedestals, only twelve in each class of sculptures being now left. Of the twelve images, eight represent Vishṇu, one Gaṇapati, one a Nāga, and two seated goddesses. The temple is trikūṭāchala or three celled structure, the main cell facing east and the other two, which are opposite to each other, facing north and south, respectively. The three cells are surmounted by three elegantly carved towers which are identical in design and execution (Plates III and IV). These with their towers are attached to the navaranga or middle hall, to which again is attached, without any partition, the mukhamaṇṭapa or front hall. The front of the temple with its three towers presents an imposing appearance and has often been selected as a model for silver and gold caskets.

[1] Epigraphia Carnatica, III, Tirumakudalu-Narsipur 97.

[2] Ibid. XI, Davangere 36.

On both sides of the entrance, runs around the front hall a jagati or railed parapet, on which, beginning from the bottom, are sculptured in succession the following horizontal friezes: (1) elephants, (2) horsemen. (3) scroll work, (4) scenes from the epics and the Purāṇas, (5) turreted pilasters, with small images and lions intervening between them, and (6) a rail divided into panels by double columns, containing figures, sometimes indelicate, between neatly ornamented bands (Plate V). Above these come pierced stone windows or perforated screens (Plate VI). Plate VII shows the above friezes except the first two on an enlarged scale. Most of the images in the fifth frieze represent Visṇu. A large portion of the rail illustrates the story of Prahlāda, as related in the Purāṇas (Plate V). From the corners on both sides of the entrance where the railed parapet ends, begins, in the middle of the outer walls, a row of large images with various kinds of ornamental canopies, and continues round the remaining portion of the temple (Plates VIII and IX). On Plate X are exhibited a few of the images on an enlarged scale. Below this row of images come six horizontal friezes. The first four of these are identical with those on the railed parapet; but in place of friezes 5 and 6 on the latter, the walls have a frieze of makaras or mythological beasts, surmounted by a frieze of swans. Above the row large images runs a fine cornice ornamented with bead work, and above this, again, a row of miniature turrets over single or double pilasters, surmounted by ornamental caves. The number of large images on the outer walls is 194, of which 114 are female. Their position is as follows:—around the south cell 54, 32 female and 22 male; at the corner between the south and west cells 14, 9 female and 5 male; around the west cell 58, 32 female and 26 male; at the corner between the west and north cells 14, 8 female and 6 male; and around the north cell 54, 33 female and 21 male. The gods and goddesses of the Hindu pantheon represented by the majority of the figures are Visṇu, and his forms such as Narasimha, Varāha, Hayagrīva, Vēṇugopāla and Paravāsudēva; Brahmā, Śiva, Gaṇapati, Indra, Manmatha, Sūrya, Garuḍa, Lakshmi, Sarasvati and Mahishāsuramardini. A few of the figures worthy of note may be mentioned; Garuda bearing on his left shoulder Nārāyaṇa and Lakshmi; Indra seated with his consort Śachi on the elephant Airāvata; dancing Visṇu and Gaṇapati; dancing Lakshmi and Sarasvati; a four-handed standing figure with the face of a monkey, two of the hands holding a discus and a conch, the other two holding between them what looks like a fruit (Plate XI, 1); and another four-handed seated figure with a discus and a conch in two hands while the other two are placed palm over palm in the fashion of a Jaina tīrthankara but with this difference that the right hand also shows the yōga-mudrā or attitude of meditation (Plate XI, 2)[1]. Of the fourth frieze from the bottom, which may be called the Purāṇic frieze, the portion running round the south cell represents scenes from the Rāmāyaṇa, that around the west cell, scenes from the Bhāgavata-purāṇa and that round the north cell, scenes from the Mahābhārata.

As stated above, the temple is triple, that is, it has three cells, and each cell consists of a garbha-gṛiha or adytum and a sukhanāsi or vestibule. The chief cell, that opposite the entrance, once enshrined an image of the god Kēśava, after whom the temple was named; but the image is no longer in existence. A few images of modern make are now kept in the cell. They consist of a seated figure of Lakshmī-nārāyaṇa, a standing figure of Lakshmaṇa, and two seated figure of different sizes representing Lakshmī. The north cell has an image of the god Janārdana (Plate XII) and the south cell, an imaeg of the god Vēṇugōpāla or Kṛishṇa playing on the flute (Plate XIII). Both of them are beautifully carved, though unfortunately the flute of the latter is broken. Judging from their execution, the chief image Kēśava must have been a piece of exquisite workmanship. The lintels of both the garbha-gṛiha and sukhanāsi doorways of all the cells are well executed. In the chief cell, the lintel of the garbha-gṛiha doorway has a seated figure of Vishṇu above, and an image of Lakshmī-nārāyaṇa below with the figures of the ten incarnations of Vishṇu sculptured round the base and a neatly carved tiny elephant at the left side; while that of the sukhanāsi doorway has a figure of Paravāsudēva above and a figure of Kēśava below. The jambs of both the doorways have dvārapālakās sculptured at the bottom. This cell has two fine niches at the sides which, though empty at present, once enshrined figures of Gaṇapati and Mahishāsuramardini, as evidenced by the figures of these deities prominently sculptured on their towers. The prominence given to these deities in the interior of a temple dedicated of Vishṇu is worthy of note. This peculiarity has been observed in several Vishṇu temples in the Hoysala style. Though these deities are often represented on the outer walls or pillars, no such prominence appears to be given to them in Vishṇu temples of the Dravidian style. The image of Janārdana in the north cell, about 6 feet high, is elegantly carved and stands on a pedestal, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet high, flanked by consorts (Plate XII). It has four hands, the upper two holding a discus and a conch and the lower two, a lotus and a mace. The Prabhā or halo has the ten avatāras or incarnations of Vishṇu represented on it. The lintel of the garbha-gṛiha doorway has a seated figure of Vishṇu above and a figure 2 similar to figure on Plate XI below, while that of the sukhanāsi doorway has a figure of Lakshmīnarasimha above and a figure of Vishṇu below. Vēṇugōpāla in the south cell is also a fine figure, about 6 feet high, standing under a honne tree (Terminalia tementosa) on a pedestal, about 1½ feet high, flanked by consorts (Plate XIII). The image has only two hands which are engaged in playing on the flute. To the right of the image at the bottom is a small figure representing a cowherd ; above this on both sides are cows listening intently to the notes of the flute ; and above these, again, to the left are seated figures of sages with folded hand. The prabhā of this image has likewise the ten incarnations of Vishṇu sculptured on it. The lintel of the grabha-gṛiha doorway has, in the upper panel, a seated female figure with four hands, and, in the lower a seated, figure of Vishṇu holding a discus, a conch, a water-vessel and a fruit. The lintel of the sukhanāsi doorway has a figure of Lakshmīnārāyaṇa above and a figure of Vēṇugōpāla below. It is indeed, fortunate that the sculptured semi-circular panel at the top of the inscribed slab in the entrance porch (Plate XXI) contains miniature representations of all the three images of the temple, so that, though the images of Kēśava has now disappeared, we are in a position to form some idea of its workmanship. The navaranga or middle hall has six ceiling panels and the mukha-maṇṭapa or front hall nine. Everyone of them is nearly three feet deep and very artistically executed, no two of them being similar in design. Plates XIV, XV and XVI show five of these ceilings. Four pillars support the navaranga and fourteen the mukha-maṇṭapa. Two of the latter are shown on Plate XVII. A narrow veranda runs round the front hall, whose walls have perforated screens all round (Plate VI). In spite of these screens the interior of the temple is very dark.

It is worthy of note that many of the large images on the outer walls bear inscribed on their pedestals the names of the artists who executed them. Such labels have also been found in a few other temples of this style in the Karnataka State, such as those at Belūr, Halēbīd, Nuggihalli, etc. Among the names of the sculptors that are engraved in the Kēśava temple at Sōmanāthapur may be mentioned Mallithamma (also called Malli in two cases), Baleya, Chauḍeya, Cāmaya, Masaṇithamma, Bharmaya, Naṉjaya and Yaḷamasaya. The first name occurs below 40 sculptures, the second below 6, the third below 5, the fourth below 4, the fifth below 3, the sixth below 2, and the seventh and eighth below 1 each. From the above it will be seen that the artist Mallithamma had most to do with the ornamentation of the temple. He is evidently identical with the Mallithamma whose name occurs below several images on the north wall of the Lakshmīnarasimha temple at Nuggihalli in the Channarayapatna Taluk of the Hassan District, which was built in A.D. 1249[1], only 19 years before this temple. The habit that the Karnataka sculptures had of signing their work is of special value to the historian of art. Elsewhere the names of artists are very rarely recorded. The figures on Plates XVIII and XIX represent five such signed images, the first two executed by Masaṇithamma and the remaining three by Chauḍeya, Mallithamma and Yeḷamasaya, respectively.

[1] Mysore Archaeological Report for 1909, para 84 ; also Report for 1913, para 9.

The figures represent respectively Lakshminarayana, Manmatha or Cupid, Vishṇu, Mahishāsuramardini and Sarasvati. In this connection it may be mentioned that the stories popularly related of a sculptor named Jakaṇachari, who is believed to have built all the Hoysala temples in and around Karnataka, are purely imaginary. No such name has been met with in any temple there. The word is merely a corruption of the Sanskrit Dakshiṇāchārya, i.e., a sculptor of the southern school, and does not denote any particular artist. Plate XX shows an elegantly carved figure of Sarasvati on an enlarged scale. It bears no label.

The cells in the open veranda surrounding the temple, which are sixty-four in number, are all empty at present. But from the inscription in the temple we learn that they once enshrined sixty-four deities as detailed below:—six deities comprising Brahmā and five others; twelve comprising Kesava and eleven others; twelve comprising Haṃsa-Narayaṇa and eleven others; ten comprising the Fish incarnation of Vishṇu and nine others; twelve comprising Sankarshaṇa and eleven others; and twelve relating to the incarnation of Vishṇu as Kṛishṇa. It may be noted here that the Garuḍagamba (or stone pillar with a figure of Garuda sculptured on it) of this temple, shown in Plate IV, is not exactly opposite the entrance as usual, but a little to the north-east. This peculiarity is traditionally accounted for as follows. When the temple was completed by Jakaṇāchāri, it looked so grand and beautiful that the gods, thinking that it was too good to be on the earth, wanted to transport it to Indra's heaven. Accordingly, the structure began to rise from the earth. Jakaṇāchāri was amazed at the sight and, in his eagerness to avert the calamity, set about mutilating some of the images on the outer walls, whereupon the building descended and occupied its present position.

A few words may now be said about the inscriptions relating to the temple. The inscribed slab in the entrance porch (Plate XXI) has four inscriptions of different dates incised in Kannada characters, two on the front face, one below the other, one on the west side and one on the east side. These are published as Tirumakūḍalu-Narasīpur Nos. 97, 100, 98 and 99, respectively in Volume III of the Epigraphia Carnatica, the dates of the epigraphs being respectively A. D. 1269, 1281, 1300 and 1325. Of these, No. 97 is the most important, as it was inscribed soon after the consecration of the temple and gives details about the gods that were set up and about the provision made for the services in the temple and for the livelihood of the temple servants. It is a long inscription consisting of 91 lines, the first seventeen being in the Sanskrit language and the rest in Kannada. After two invocatory verses in praise of the Boar incarnation of Vishṇu, the epigraph proceeds to give the usual account of the rise of the Hoysalas and their genealogy down to Nārasimha III. We are then told that, when king Nārasimha was one day seated in the council chamber in his capital Dōrasamudra (Haḷēbīḍ), the minister Sōma rose from his seat along with his nephews Malli-dēva and Chikka-Kētaya and made obeisance to the king, whereupon the king understood his desire and gave him all he wished, besides making an annual grant of 3,000 (gold pieces) for the worship of the images of Vishṇu set up in the agrahāra which he had founded. The Sanskrit portion closes with the statement that Sōma made a worthy distribution of the grant, as described further on in the Kannada language. The Kannada portion of the record tells us that, when the refuge of all the world, favourite of earth and fortune, māhā-rājādhirāja, rāja-paramēśvara lord of the excellent city of Dvārāvati, sun in the sky of the Yādava family, crest-jewel of the all-knowing, king of the hill chiefs, champion over the Malapas, terrible to warriors, fierce in war, sole warrior, firm in the field of battle, Śanivārasiddhi, Giridurgamalla, a Rāma in firmness of character, a lion to the elephants his enemies, a Kandarpa of unprecedented beauty, establisher of the Chōḷa king, raiser up of the Pāṇḍya kingdom, uprooter of the Magara kingdom, setter up of pillars of victory at Sētu and the Vindhya mountains, profusely munificent in giving wealth and land, Srī Vishṇu-vardhana -pratāpa-chakravarti Hoysaḷa-bhujabaḷa–śrī--vīra--Nārasimha--Dēvarasa was in the residence of Dōrasamudra, ruling the kingdom in peace and wisdom, on Wednesday, the 12th lunar day of the bright fortnight of Āshāḍha in the year Śukla corresponding to the Śaka year 1192, he made a grant of the revenues of certain places to provide for the services, festivals, repairs and the livelihood of servants of the Kēśava temple caused to be erected by Śōma-daṇṇāyaka in the great agrahara established by him in his own name. The inscription then records the grant of the revenues of certain other places by Sōma, the names of his parents being given as Hemmeya-daṇḍanātha and Rēvalā. Among the titles applied to Sōma may be mentioned—great minister, gāyi-Gōpāḷa, gaṇḍa-peṇḍā-ra Jūba (? sacrificial post) to maṇḍaḷikas, champion over proud maṇḍaḷikas, a Dēvēndra among daṇḍanāths, a Svayam-bhū with his good sword (asi-vara), a Triṇētra in wielding the sword, a Rēvanta in riding the most vicious horses, a Kṛitānta to the hostile army. We are then told that the Malli-dēva and Chikka-Kētaya, the nephews of Sōma, made an allotment of the revenues for the gods and the temple servants. The rest of the record gives details of the allotment. The inscription calls the village Vidyānidhi-prasanna-Sōmanātha-pura. The three images of the temple are named respectively Prasanna-Kēśava, Gaṇḍapeṇḍāra-Gōpāla and Varada-Janār-dana, the second image being so named after one of the titles of Sōma. One of the gods outside the temple for whom also an allotment is made is "Lakshmīnara-simha on the bank of the Kāvēri." The temple dedicated to this god, which is situated a few yards from the bank of the Kāvēri to the south-west of the Kēśava temple, is now in ruins (Plate XXII, a). Though built in the Hoysaḷa style, it is a plain structure without any sculptures on the outer walls. This temple, is locally known as the 'Moṇḍusāle temple' because tradition has it that it was built by an artist with a maimed hand (moṇḍu).

The remaining three inscriptions are all in Kannaḍa. No. 100, engraved below the above-mentioned inscription, records a grant in A.D. 1281 by the same king to the ächāryas, Vaishṇavas and nambis of the Kesava temple. The signature of the king—Malaparol-ganda—is given at the end. No. 98, inscribed on the west side of the slab, registers a grant in A. D. 1300 to the maha janas of the agrahāra by king Ballāḷa III, son of Nārasimha III. No. 99. which is on the east side of the same slab, is dated in A. D. 1325 and records an agreement between the Vaishṇavas and certain other mahā janas of the village with regard to the payment of certain sums of money in favour of the temple. Two more epigraphs have been recently discovered. One of them, dated A. D. 1497, is on a beam of the veranda on the south, while the other, dated A. D. 1550, is on a slab built into the ceiling of the veranda on the west. The former tells us that, during the reign of the Saluva king Immaḍi Narasinga, on a petition being made to him about the restoration of the agrahāra of Somanathapura, which had been originally founded by Soma-dandanātha but had subsequently gone to decay, he called the notice of Nrisimha son of īśvara to this matter, whereupon the latter directed Nañja Rāy-Odeyar of Ummattūr to restore the agrahāra; and that accordingly this chief granted certain villages for the lingas and the god Kēśava of Sōmanāthapura and bestowed a number of vrittis on various Brahmans. The other inscription records that, during the rule of the Vijayanagar king Sadāśiva-Rāya, the mahā-maṇḍalēśvara Avubhaḷarājaya-mahā-arasu, son of Rāmaraja-Thimmaraja-Eṛedimmaraja of the lineage of Bukkaraja of Āravaṭi, having been informed on enquiry that the Chatur-vēdimangala Vidyānidhi-Prasanna-Sōmanāthapura was the holy hermitage of Vasishtha, remitted the taxes which were being paid to the palace by the Brahmans of the agrahāra. The signature of Avubhaḷarājaya śrīrangaśayi—comes at the end.

The inscription at Harihar, which has already been referred to, also gives some details about the genealogy of Sōma the agrahāra of Sōmanāthapura founded by him and the gods set up therein. It is engraved in Kannada characters and consists of 88 lines, the first 42 of which are in the Sanskrit language. The Kannada portion of the record is more or less a paraphrase of the Sanskrit portion. After a few invocatory verses in praise of Sambhu, the Boar incarnation of Vishṇu, Gaṇapati, Lakshmi and Vishṇu, the inscription gives the descent of Sōma thus :—In the race born from the feet of Brahmā arose Rudra, who was a minister of King Hermāḍi, lord of Kalyāṇa ; his son was Mailaya-nāyaka ; his son, Heggaḍa-nāyaka, who was also a subordinate of the lord of Kalyāṇa ; to him and his wife Rēvalā was born Sōma. The Kannada portion gives a few more details :—Rudra, here named Ruddiya-nāyaka had the title gaṇḍa-peṇḍāra. His wife was Nannave. Mailaya-nāyaka served under the Chālukya king Jagadekamalla and had the title gayi-Gōvaḷa. His wife was Rebbalā. Then the inscription refers to the agrahāra established by Sōma on the bank of the Kāvēri and the gods set up by him. The agrahāra was so full of learned men that even the parrots there were capable of holding discussions in mīmāmsā, tarka and vyākaraṇa. In addition to the gods already mentioned, as having been set up in the Kēśava temple, the record names the following :— Vishvaksena, Indra and Sarasvati. The Kannada portion adds Gaṇapati, Bhairava, Sūrya and Durgā, and gives a total number of seventy-four gods set up in the Kēśava temple. We are also told that Sōma set up a number of lingas in the village. The Kannada portion names five of them set up in the north–east of the village. They are Bijjalēśvara, Pergaḍesvara, Rēvalesvara, Bayiralēśvara and Somanatha, the second and third being named after Sōma's father and mother and the fifth after himself. These lingas are enshrined in a temple known as the Panchalinga, which is mostly in ruins. This is a large structure built of granite, containing five cells which stand in a line (Plate XXII, b), and there is also a fine inscription[1] here, similar to the one at the entrance porch of the Kesava temple and bearing the same date. The record then tells us that Sōma's elder brother was Mēlaya, his nephew Mallidēva and his family guru Gangadharārya. After a few verses in praise of the god Harihara, the Sanskrit portion closes with the statement that in the year Vibhava corresponding to the Saka year 1191 (A.D. 1268) Sōmanātha had a tower with golden kalaśas made at the gate of the temple of Harihara. The Kannada portion adds that the tower was of five storeys and applies the following additional titles to Sōma :—a jewel of ministers, a Chāṇakya in policy, a Yōgandhara in business, champion over traitors to their lord. It concludes thus :—When (with titles as given in a previous paragraph) Narasimha-Devarasa was ruling the kingdom in peace and wisdom, his servant (with titles as given above), Soma-daṇḍanatha, in the above-mentioned year, having founded the agrahāra Vidyanidhiprasanna-Somanathapura, built Śaiva and Vaishṇava temples there and set up the gods in them, made a tower at the eastern gateway of the Harihara temple in Harihara with five storeys and five golden kalaśâs.

It may also be mentioned here that the above were not the only acts of piety of Soma-daṇḍanātha. From some inscriptions at Turuvēkere, Tumkur District, we learn that he also founded Turuvekere as an agrahara under the name of Sarvajña-śrī-vijaya-Nārasimhapura after his master Nārasimha III about the middle of the 13tn century. The same inscriptions also lead us to suppose that the Chennakēśava and Mūle-Śankaresvara temples at Turuvēkere, which are also in the Hoysala style[3], were caused to be erected by him.

The Sanskrit portions of Tirumakuḍalu-Narasīpur No. 97 and the Harihar inscription are given in the Appendix at the end.

Fergusson, the great authority on architecture, whose work contains a woodcut[1] of one of the towers of the Kēśava temple at Sōmanāthapur, says:—

"The following woodcut will give an idea—an imperfect one, it must be confessed—of the elegance of outline and marvellous elaboration of detail that characterises these shrines. Its height seems to be only about 30 feet, which, if it stood in the open, would be almost too small for architectural effect; but in the centre of an enclosed court, and where there are no larger objects to contrast with it, it is sufficient when judiciously treated, to produce a considerable impression of grandeur, and apparently does so in this instance."

In Workman's Through Town and Jungle, which contains a few more details about the same temple, the following remarks occur:—

"The most complete and symmetrical, although the smallest of the three temples in Karnataka, is at the village of Sōmanāthapur.

If any parts can be called finer than others, the palm must be given to the three stellate towers. Their height from the plinth is about 32 feet, and not a square inch of their surface is without decoration. . . . . These towers absolutely captivate the mind by their profusion of detail and perfection of outline; and there is no suggestion of superfluity in the endless concourse of figures and designs.

To construct a building of less than 35 feet in height, load it from bottom to top with carving, and produce the effect not only of beauty and perfect symmetry but also of impressiveness, shows supreme talent on the part of the architects."
